MR. LEGARRETA'S OPINIONS.

"The law of the Free Banks is not our "own creation; its advantages may "be questioned, but the theory and "system are not to blame; its bad results in our midst arise from abuse "and perversion of the spirit of that "law."

Mr. E. Legarreta's report on the working of the Buenos Ayres Bolsa for the year 1889 is an able document. The talented Chairman of the Bolsa has availed of the opportunity to give his views on the financial situation and to portray the effects of bad financial government. As the representative of the institution which was the "bête noire" of a Minister's sickly apprehensions, he dwells at length on the fatality of a policy worthy of a better fate if it had not been disgraced by violence and arbitrariness of the worst description. There is such moderation in the remarks and such a high-toned style in the whole report that we think Mr. Legarreta has been bred in the school of "suaviter in modo, fortiter in re." This is all the more gratifying when contrasted with the violent tone of the ministerial speeches and letters of the unfortunate epoch of Bolsa oppression. Against the querulous arguments of the Minister who sees in the Bolsa an enemy of the currency, and in the private banks a conspiracy to raise the price of gold, we set the logic and cool judgment of the Chairman of the Stock-Exchange, who condenses the evils of the situation in the quotation we have put at the head of this article.

We have outlived the silly epoch when a Bolsa broker was a synonym for a gold "bull", when some ingenuous people actually believed that some Argentine James Fisk had organized a conspiracy or gold ring to depreciate the value of the currency, when every private banker was supposed to be hoarding up gold to defy a ministerial programme, when the whole German community was looked upon with suspicion because Germans, with natural financial, instinct, foresaw the turn in events and bought gold to secure themselves against the risks of the violent fluctuations looming on the horizon of the market. How such extravagant opinions ever gained favor remains a mystery. How with such persistent fatality, financiers and public writers could have mistaken effect for cause from March to September 1889 is another phenomenon of River Plate vicissitude and versatility, but common sense, to a certain extent, has regained its sway, and the Bolsa report for 1889 will materially help to show individuals and collectivities how a reputation can deceive and how a popular current may run riot in the wrong direction. The Chairman of the Bolsa does not stoop to say that his opinions were the only orthodox ones at the time: no, he actually applauds the good-intentions, but deplores the means, he leaves to private judgment the conclusion that the Minister and those who supported him were wrong and that the Bolsa was right.

But let byegones be byegones; let the dead past bury its dead. Charitable oblivion is already veiling the errors of the past and throwing a cloak over those who played such a sorry part in the treatment of the market's infirmities. Still, we cannot resist the temptation of thinking for a moment what the state of affairs to-day would be if the financial management of the Nation during 1889 had been entrusted to the able author of the present Bolsa Report. The Buenos Ayres Bolsa would never have been tampered with, the sales of gold would never have been stopped, the Treasury would not have thrown away 25 million gold dollars in a vain attempt to put down the premium, the volume of paper money would have been considerably reduced, and the country's finances would not have been put back several years: we must add a reservation, that Mr. Legarreta who penned the Bolsa Report of 1889 would have acted up to his opinions had he been Finance Minister. But today, when the whole financial machinery of the Government has been evolved out of the complicated process of years, when a vast array of interests are at stake in a speculation and inflation fostered by lengthy and careful financing in that unfortunate direction, the very best finance-minister in the world would find it a superhuman task to put on the brake at once or endeavor to carry out in a summary manner those economic principles that are accepted as financial axioms among civilized nations. We see even today that the actual finance-minister is powerless to carry out the measures he decreed in the month of December; the withdrawal of the currency is now a myth in view of the abnormal situation of the market, but as Mr Legarreta says, the cause is simply banking mismanagement, a diversion of the money of the country into speculative channels under the easy and alluring conditions of free banking—the financial curse of this country. Could anything be truer than the following paragraph from Mr Legarreta's report:—

"The evil lies not in the system, but in the management of the Banks; there's the rub. It is in their management that the free banks are a failure—a management which entrusted to provincial Governments, has been neither discreet nor zealous in the diffusion of credit, jeopardizing the very elements that should have been distributed to foment industry and production."

The depreciation of the currency, as Mr. Legarreta says, does not arise from any economic disturbances: the infirmity lies in the circulation itself, in the banks that direct that circulation and restrict it when the inflation of values passes a certain limit. Since the evil lies in the banking management, it strikes one that the great remedy should be a sweeping reform in that management, but that can only be done when these free banks are no longer such; when they are either reduced to the category of so-called private banks, or, what under the circumstances looks more probable, swept one and all into the maternal folds of the National Bank, which will cover all their foibles and take over all their obligations.

After reading all this, it sounds strange that people at one time could have believed that the Bolsa was to blame for the currency crisis; still such was the fact, and this explains how the Chairman of the Bolsa, whilst vindicating that insitution, has soared into the realms of a financial programme, the reading of which embodies much sound advice and shows that the Bolsa is managed by one who has all the necessary qualities not only of a chairman of a stock-exchange committee, but of a financier of the first order. By all means let all study and digest the Report.

OUR MAILS.

London, January 11.

Till a few hours after midnight the condition of the young King of Spain caused the greatest anxiety to those around him, and but slender hopes were entertained of his recovery. Subsequently, however more nourishment was administered and blisters were applied, with the result that the Royal patient exhibited a marked improvement. The Cabinet have unanimously decided that in the event of his Majesty's death the Crown should immediately pass to his eldest sister, the Princess Maria de las Mercedes, under the regency of Queen Christina.

Telegrams received in Lisbon from London state that the Portuguese answer is regarded by the British Government as affording a basis for negotiations with the object of effecting an amicable settlement. A desire is, moreover, expressed that a definitive agreement should be established between the two countries for the delimitation of their respective territories, so as to prevent the recurrence of unfortunate disputes.

News has reached Berlin from Zanzibar to the effect that three of the German officers comprised in Major Wissmann's force have been taken prisoners by the Arab chief Bwana Heri.

Lord Randolph Churchill presided over a public meeting in St. James's Hall last night in support of the movement for establishing a polytechnic in North-West London, comprehending the district between Notting-hill and Highgate.

Yesterday's reports show a decided abatement of the epidemic of influenza, so far at any rate as they relate to the metropolis. The number of cases at the hospitals has been greatly diminished, and a favourable modification has also been noticed in character. At the Central Telegraph and General Post Office Departments, it is believed that the crisis is passed, and that these services will soon be relieved from the pressure caused by the numerous absences. A telegram from St. Petersburg states that the malady, which originated in Russia, has completely disappeared from that capital.

Inspector Abberline was the principal witness examined at the Bow street Police-court, on the further hearing of the charge against Mr. Newton, solicitor, and others, of conspiring to defeat the ends of justice. The inquiry was adjourned till to day.

On the prosecution of the district surveyor, Henry Walbridge, builder, Fulham, was fined £10 at the West London Police-court for using, in the erection of certain new houses, mortar which was not of the quality prescribed by the London County Council.

General Booth, of the Salvation Army, was fined 20s at the Thames Police-court for keeping a lodging-house in Whitechapel which was not registered.

In anticipation of high rates at the settlement, the Stock Markets showed heaviness, with certain exceptions. Home railways were irregular, Sheffield "A" being bought on the dividend. American lines gave way, and Canadian and Mexican were inactive. Foreign Government bonds closed at a reduction. Consols for money and the account declined ⅛ per cent.

OUR LADIES' LETTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, January 4th

We have not so much a dead, as a dying season. The influenza plague is a sore trial, especially to Parisians, who expected to pass a comparatively tranquil winter, after their six months' Exhibition pleasures. I am sorry to say ladies are very much frightened by the Influenza; those who can, escape to the Riviera; some make for Algeria or a wintering in Egypt; not a few try Portugal, as a half-way house to Madeira. This "scare" is in a measure justifiable, as the fair sex contribute the largest contingent of sufferers and martyrs. It is now a good five weeks since the endemic appeared; then it was deemed so insignificant that the doctors hardly condescended to notice it. Since, it has become very serious, and the doctors now allude to it with grave respect. It having changed its nature, the Faculty has changed its advice. "What is the best way to escape the malady?" a lady asked Dr Bouchard a few days ago. "Don't catch it, madame," was his recipe.

Unfortunately, it has the ugly habit of catching you; its execution work may be judged by its having trebled the weekly deaths. For two classes of people it is mortal: the very old and the infirm. They cannot resist the sudden congestion of the lungs, which for the strong is only a few days' duration. I am aware of very robust persons who find it no easy matter to shake off the foe. The disease suddenly strikes, and rapidly prostrates; when attacked call in the doctor, not so much to prescribe for the influenza, as to regulate your mode of living to resist the invader. A medicament called "anti-pyrine" is generally given: this combats the fever and also prostration. But the main point to attend to is, dress warmly, and eat heartily as a rule, when not a sufferer: afflicted, retire to bed instantly, maintain the room agreeably warm, eat lightly, and when convalescent, scrupulously avoid catching cold; whole families are influenzaed simultaneously, and as the real danger consists in a relapse when on the highroad to recovery, patients are very slow to try the open air—especially the cold air that reigns.

It is difficult to be mirthful amidst so much sickness and surrounded by so much mourning; hence, why the festive season has been next to a blank. Dinner parties were broken up on the eve fixed for taking place; the wiser hostesses postponed their gatherings in time. The five o'clock teas, that were so merry, so unconventional and so chatty, have next to disappeared. The charm of these gatherings lies in the ladies of the house making and serving the Bohea; the servers are confined to their beds, and the expected guests remain in-doors.

Madame Carnot was among one of the earliest sufferers of the endemic, and that before it assumed its present wicked stage. She made more than one effort to keep faith with her young friends, and so they had their Christmas treat. To her immediate circle of juveniles she added 400 "invités", chosen by the school teachers from the poorest families in their districts, boys and girls in equal proportion. They were conveyed in omnibuses to the Palace of the Elysee, and received the highest seats in Synagogue—that was the only inequality practiced at the family party. The little folk, aged between 10 and 13, had drama and comedy, interpreted by Guignol; there was a splendid sit-down lunch, and a stand-up Kermesse round Christmas Trees laden with toys; each child was furnished with a basket, told to fill it with playthings, cakes and sweet-meats; they were also presented with Red Riding Hood Capes, and a savings bank book with ten francs lodged to their account. Madame Carnot filled both the hungry and the rich with good things, and sent neither empty away. By such acts as these she is disarming political opponents, and is winning golden opinions by her programme—one touch of nature makes the whole world kin.

Why should it be left to a republican form of Government to thus bring the classes and the masses into touch? In Vienna, the head centre of aristocratic society, the English Ambassador receives like the tenant of the White House at Washington: at Berlin, the caucus of Imperialism, the British Ambassador organises even a fete for the sweeps; John Bull's representative here might show French republicans that Queen Victoria includes the "people order" among her subjects. The English colony under this head is loud in its complaint.

Following up the key-note struck by Madame Carnot, the various ministers have adopted the excellent custom of giving a toy-treat and lunch, in their official residences, to the wives and children of the employes—from the highest to the lowest, in their department, and where not the shadow of social superiority is allowed. If a 'ronde' be organised, it is the daughter of the Minister, or of his chief subordinate, who opens the dance with the son of a supernumerary clerk. But then the snobbery which is an institution in other countries is unknown here, for the lowliest Frenchman is a very proud and very independent individual, and nowhere are these healthy humanities so much in evidence as among the working-classes, for whom they are a 'culte.'

The system of relieving the poor in France, and charity is the dominant question and work just now, leaves very much to be desired. When vicarious, it does not generally reach its aim; when official, it is too bunglesome to attain its end. As a rule, women do not tuck up their sleeves to execute relief aid to the poor; some limit their duty to keeping a stall at a fancy fair, which affords the opportunity also of displaying toilettes and graces; a few practice sentimental benevolence in the spirit of the crowned heads of Austria and Spain, that exercise their humiliation one day out of the three hundred and sixty-five, by sprinkling the washed toes of a bevy of Upper Ten beggars with perfumed water at Paschal Lamb epoch. The real toilers in practical bounty towards the lowly are the "religieuses," yet the French ladies have plenty of room to help, by modelling the mission works of their Anglo-Saxon sisters. As for official poor relief, the swarms, not of professional beggars, but the honest poor, that now have taken possession of the capital is the crying condemnation of its inefficiency. Seventy-five per cent. of the paid officers ought to be relegated to the colonies; true, they but receive a miserable pittance in the way of salary, so that they are a poor, supported by the poor. But they secure one advantage, that of being a government officer. Now, every Frenchman's aim is to belong to the State's tail; if not the first joint, he will philosophically accept the last.

Furs, wraps, mantles, pelisses, woollen robes, large muffs, thick boas, stout gloves, strongish boots, thickish stockings—these are the materials of the fashions. Since the Faculty has issued the ukase that warmth is the chief safe-guard against the influenza plague, ladies appear bent to roll themselves up like an Alpine marmot during the winter. Perhaps the 'Bonne Femme' cape, despite its manifold transformations, is the most general and useful garment of the moment. Mantles are in grey or some sombre shade of cloth, always trimmed with fur or Astrakan. Jacquettes are also in cloth, and close-fitting the figure; they are silk-lined and padded; sleeves high and prominent at shoulder; collar upright. Hats are large, and the favourite is in black felt, trimmed with the new Walter Scott ribbon, placed as bows, following taste, but never losing sight of elegance and simplicity; a small veil in black tulle and spotted is worn with this hat. Capotes are in old rose, green or emerald velvet; a border composed of a crown in jet, with a plume of feathers in front. Other capotes are in black velvet, trimmed with green ribbon, with bows before and behind, in claret coloured cloth, embroidered with jet. The capote in black lace and jet embroidery is very elegant. For skating the hat is next to an elegant nothing and so recalling the capote, but it is in fur.

Fur is the favorite trimming and as costly as purses can demand. Visiting dresses are mostly in black satin, with small flower patterns; next comes plain velvet; all these dresses are made close-fitting, even when the tissue is woolen. A very elegant bias-striped beige has appeared, and which looks charming both for corsage and skirt. For slender figures and very young persons the new tissue is very suitable.

Regarding shapes, as a general rule robes are worn flat, close-fitting, having a small train with trimming on the lower part of the skirt. For example, a Scotch surah will have the bottom of the dress ornamented with a band of oak-green cloth, the upper edge of the band being scalloped and heightened by a black braid embroidery.

Silk and China crape are the favorite materials for ball toilettes; corsage without basques. Other colored wollens are in vogue for town dresses; grey bengaline with black passementerie trimming has numerous admirers, as a walking dress. Jewelry never was more in fashion than at present; ladies seem to carry a whole shop-full of artistic bibelots on their toilettes. Among the multitude of gem knick-knacks is the small brooch fastening the collar to the robe, with a falling chain to which the watch is fixed.

It is rumoured that Madame Adelina Patty has instructed a notary in Paris to ascertain if the Marquis de Caux, her first husband, who died a short time ago aged 64, has been provided with a suitable sepulchre, and if not, to take the necessary steps to secure such. Since his divorce the deceased formed rather part of the jetsam and flotsam of fashionable society. It is questionable if the celebrated cantatrices who married into aristocratic families have been truly happy. Madame Catalini became Baroness Valatregue; Madlle. Sontag, the Countess Rossi, minister of Pius IX., and who was assassinated. Sophie Cruvelli is Viscomtesse Vigier, and the hostess for the cosmopolitan society at Nice; Madame Alboni was the Comtesse Pepoli, by her first marriage; Madame de Lagrange is Countess Stankowitch; Mme. Christine Nilsson is Comtesse de Miranda, and Madlle. Leisenger is the wife of Comte de Hartenan, ne Prince Alexander of Battenberg.

Strange rumors are afloat respecting that strange creature, Sarah Bernhardt; some say she is going to a nunnery, and that born and reared a Jewess, she has been converted to the Catholic Church, by Father Didon. She has had many interviews, or rather "talks", with lady members of the Salvation Army. Now it seems that the object of the actress was merely to study high religious fervor, in order to get up her role of Jeanne d'Arc, which she is creating for Messrs. Barbier and Goundod's lyrical drama of that name. She says, the life of the Maid of Orleans belongs to the Mystery or Passion Plays of the Middle Ages and is to be interpreted in that light. Modern France, however, views Joan merely as a pure patriot, as much martyred by her friends as by her foes, but whose fanatical earnestness succeeded in expelling the English from France, and leaving Charles VII. a united realm. The British can vie with the French in applauding the simple and sad career of the pure-minded Maid.

It is the custom in France for everybody to have a pack of visiting cards printed on the occasion of the New Year, and apparently to sow them broadcast among friends and acquaintances. The newer plan is to send, instead, picture cards, so common in Germany and England.

It is the right of clients to embrace on New Year's day, the young women who sell on the flag-ways in the early morning hot coffee and soup. Many of the girls, to avoid the gallantry, remain at home on that morning. When the market women of Paris waited on Rochefort to embrace him for some patriotic act, he kissed the spokeswoman, declining to extend the operation to the delegates, alleging he was no longer a journalist.

A BACHELOR'S VIEWS ON MARRIAGE AND MAR DEL PLATA.

Buenos Ayres, February 8th 1890.

My dearest Juanita.

I hope your quarters at Mar del Plata do not resemble the average bachelor's diggings in town, with their combination of cheap furniture and general stuffiness this hot weather.

How I envy you your sea breezes, which daily kiss your hair and sweet eyes.

How jealous I am, of the waves, even, which enfold you in their embrace.

But what is the use of my sighing for sea breezes, at eight dollars a day, my dear!!!

A man on a small salary is a beast of burden in this country, for work; work only. So with dogged submission I accept my dingy quarters, growing daily dingier. Old boots and garments, crumpled newspapers, burnt matches and disreputable pipes, intensify its dreariness. My masculine instinct is to adore not adorn, and with you away I can only be helplessly miserable. I even lookedo ver an old cookery-book the other day, to try and get up an appetite, instead of taking my inevitable cock-tail before dinner.

In my imagination I dined with your sweet self at the "Grand." I go thoroughly through all the "menu" and enjoy it. "Que amor"; you will say! and yet who would deprive a poor duffer on two hundred and fifty dollars a month of his comforting imagination.

Do you think, out of that sum, we could afford stained floors, a few yards of pretty cretonne to cover the furniture with, and a few treasures in the shape of photos and bric-a-brac etc.? Like the cookery books and society papers write about? But, there; I quite forgot the kitchen, the butcher and the corner "almacenero", despite its manifold transformations, is the most general and useful garment of the moment. Mantles are in grey or some sombre shade of cloth, always trimmed with fur or Astrakan. Jacquettes are also and then we expect two souls not only to beat but to live as one, and one hundred dollars to do the duty of two, and as Punch says, "it don't."

So if you will only let me run riot with my fertile imagination, I shall think you are ever perfection and that out of nothing, you can ever manage something.

In that incomparable satire "Kingsley's Water Babies", he describes an imaginary realm, called "Waste Paper Land." Here, all the worthless things that ever were written have been wafted from time to time, covering acres upon acres. All the flat and vicious novels, the useless verses, dull history, insipid Sunday school books and lying biography etc. etc. And yet how dear to us, and to us only, are these waste paper memorials. Marriage, my dear, sometimes turns out a failure, when we persist in throwing into the waste paper basket, our kindly impulses instead of filing them in each others hearts.

To such a clear, well meaning little woman as you are, my darling, we never can go far wrong even on two hundred and fifty dollars a month.

I see, by reading up the cookery book, we are expected to make stews of nothing and know a little of everything in a very short space of time. Now, whenever I try to make a fire I put it dead out, so I hope you will never expect me to get up early, make the kitchen fire and bring you tea after marriage. Don't, whatever you do, cultivate too much charming helplessness, childish ignorance, hopeless innocence and such fascinating dependence and dainty baby ways, that I shall have to feel as if you could not ever take care of yourself or understand anything either.

Such sweet little bits of helplessness are not fit for this world, or Monster Man; although I have seen such women coddled and cared for in a thousand ways, where more independent women had to "hustle" for themselves.

We should not either simper through this life, or live up to the cookery book. A little of both makes a good sauce.

How idle, my dearest, this letter is. How easy to 'say' what one would do, and what one would not do.

Let us thank heaven that the marriage service and state is not confined to a series of 'takes' without any 'gives'.

My name is "Frank", but you can change it to Luxury, if you will, and sit in its lap.

We need not necessarily bring into our small means and uncomfortable home any disorderly ways. If we do, what is the use of giving all the recent educational advantages to a woman at all?

Flowers bloom on the edge of the ice desert of Alaska I wonder how long our love will bloom on two hundred and fifty dollars a month, and no "perquisites" except my vivid imagination.

At any rate, when you return let us try it, as love glorifies all trials, and a little contented imagination in these hard times goes a long way.

Hoping this will find you in the best of health.

I am ever youre etc. etc.

F. O.

To Miss Juanita Plumas
Mar del Plata.

THE FLORES ENGLISH COLLEGE.

DIRECTOR CAPT. ELLIS ARTHUR, ETON COLLEGE.

It was our pleasing duty to inspect this establishment last Wednesday evening in company with Mr. Michl. Dinneen, editor of The Southern Cross, and Mr. Samuel Johnston, the well-known shipping agent, and from what we therein saw, heard and tasted we have no hesitation in congratulating the residents of this city and the entire province on the engrafting amongst us, so to speak, of that high class system of education which has acquired for Capt. Arthur's "Alma mater" (Eton) a grand, undying, world-wide reputation. For years the favorite plan here has been to stuff the boy's head with as much book learning as possible, utterly regardless of those higher moral acquirements which should form the character of every man and without which there can be no real success or happiness in life: for how can a youth even of good parts be expected to plod along step by step over the narrow rugged lane-way, despised and buffetted at every turn of the road by rampant vice or gaping fools who ride or drive across the broad smooth surface of vanity's fashionable avenues and thoroughfares? To err is human, and there are none of us without our faults, but to this faulty class of education we attribute in a great measure if not entirely, the many, moral aye and even commercial failures of every-day life. Many a fine, brave, noble spirit that with proper training were capable of great things, has ignominiously broken down under this effeminate, hot-house system: for how can exotics thrive in this cold bleak world of ours?

"The weakness of human nature" theory is not alone foolish but positively impious, for it cannot be supposed by rational beings that an all wise, all good and all beautiful Providence created us under such unfair or adverse conditions. No: he is a smart boy that can tell a lie in half a dozen of languages, but he is a better man that can speak the truth at all times, even though it be only in one tongue. This is the kind of friend that one might "grapple to his soul with hoops of steel", but Captain Ellis Arthur goes farther and insists on his boys (say scholars or boarders, no matter which) speaking and acting the truth in several languages.

The few schools in this city that have adopted this high advanced class of instruction, or, as we might very appropriately term it, the tutoring of the heart (in contradistinction to mere headwork) are over crowded, and the same happy fate awaits as many more started on the same broad ennobling principles, whilst those conducted on the old retrograde plan must inevitably dwindle away and die.

The prospectus claims Flores as the healthiest suburb, a fact which Belgrano, San Isidro or even dear Quilmes may well dispute; but, beyond doubt, any one of these offers immense advantages over the city, where rents are so excessive, ventilation limited and spacious play-grounds unattainable. There is ample accommodation for 80 or 100 boarders, but only 50 will be now admitted. A third of this figure is already booked and the rest might be filled in without delay or difficulty did Captain Arthur court the support of the wealthy Argentine families desirous of having their children acquire the English language; but our friend won't listen to this until he has first fairly tried his own countrymen, a course which may prove more plucky than remunerative. "C'est magnifique mais ce n'est pas la guerre".

It is scarce six months since our gallant countryman started. Already his growing popularity among parents and guardians renders it imperative on him to rent the largest house in the whole town, namely, Negrotto's old hotel. It contains thirty-six fine rooms and is conveniently situated close to the Western Railway Station, the Plaza and Catholic Church. The tramway runs by the door every ten minutes, and the market is quite as well supplied with meat and vegetables as any in the city. Altogether, the position could not be more favorable or better chosen. The whole building has been done up newly at considerable cost and really leaves nothing to be desired in a sanitary point of view. On the ground floor are the class rooms, refectory, laboratory, etc., as also the private quarters of the principal's family: whilst above are the sleeping apartments, library, etc. These are not alone free from damp, but are thoroughly well-ventilated by patent wind shafts running through the walls at certain given intervals, for all the world like the pipes of the "algibe," the mouths being close to the ceiling to prevent cold or chill from the currents of fresh health-giving air with which they are constantly replenished. At the back there is a splendid playground, with a fine ball alley, while to the right is a large, shady field, suitable for cricket, football, or any other game. A kind friend has likewise promised the use of his park on the Matanzas river for those of the pupils who desire to learn those most useful, manly accomplishments — riding, swimming and fishing, without which no young gentleman's education can really be considered complete. How different would the rising generation be if they took to these, instead of smoking, drinking and too often something worse!

The Flores English School is incorporated with the National College, and hereby students can graduate in any branch without difficulty or impediment of any kind.

All classes are taught by thoroughly competent masters under the immediate supervision of the Director.

Boarders are given every possible comfort, and all domestic arrangements are carefully looked after. The eating and the drinking, too, is plentiful and fine, as may well be supposed when we assert that Mrs. Arthur presides every morning and evening at table. Discipline is the Captain's strong point, and so far does he carry his love of duty that he assures us he would as soon teach boys A B C as charge a battery "for England home and beauty," the still small voice of conscience echoing louder in his heart of hearts than the ringing cheers of an entire army.

Our colleague, in a moment of pardonable enthusiasm, declared that although an ardent "Home Ruler" it was no longer necessary for our countrymen in the camp to send their children to Ireland for education, in as much as they had here at their own doors all the best advantages that such a fond paternal sacrifice was meant to supply.

Professor Jones speaks Italian beautifully, having studied theology for some years at the Propaganda in Rome.

The Spanish master is a Correntino by birth, but all his studies were made in the University of Buenos Ayres.

All the other branches of the curriculum are under the charge of fully competent and experienced teachers.

The Captain himself teaches drill, a most useful and manly exercise. What pleased us most of all was the utter absence of punishment, whether corporeal or otherwise, the mild rules of discipline supplying the hard blows of a desk rule. Insubordination is corrected by a severe look, a kind word and a harsh cough—nothing more.

Pupils who fail to comprehend these friendly hints, this gentle and most gentlemanly admonition, must go elsewhere. As the old saying has it—they will go further and fare worse.

How different the old motto—"spare the rod and spoil the child" as though we were so many animals "without discourse of reason"; or is our nature so fallen that there is not enough honest ambition left in our tender offspring to respond freely to the promise of fair rewards. We hope not. We believe Captain Arthur to be right and congratulate him accordingly.

EDITOR'S TABLE.

The news yesterday was principally of an influenzaish kind. Everybody who is anybody has it in a more or less benign way. Those who heroically refuse to go to bed and stick to their usual routine fare best. They say a good many people are "shamming" the epidemic, to get a holiday and keep out of the way of the crisis. Engaged couples do it on the principle that Influenza makes the heart grow fonder far more than absence.

The Italian frigate America Vespucci on board which the Duke of Aosta is a Lieutenant, will be here this week, and will enter the new Dock, if enough water be found in the entrance Channel.

The Rowing Club have decided to have matches on the last Sunday of every month for the rest of the season. This will keep the fashionable Tigre alive for six weeks more.

The best news that Galvest n has ever sent to the Plate is that His Holiness the Pope has abolished Lent and fasting. No more "bacalao", salt herrings, sardines and other fasting and indigestible abominations. Some people at first thought that the welcome change was only for Lent; but it appears that it wipes out fasting and abstinence for evermore. People looked twenty years younger under the influence of the news. The fish traders may suffer: but who cares for them. Let them go fish. Nevertheless, if humanity would but eat more fish—as it probably will when no longer forced to swallow it at certain times—it would be far healthier than it is at present.

The benefit performance given at Frank Brown's Circus on Friday on behalf of the British Hospital may be briefly chronicled as an all-round success—artistically, socially and financially. The British Colony of Buenos Aires and its suburbs marshalled in full force, and from first to last displayed truly British enthusiasm, so far so, indeed, as to astonish the performers now accustomed to the comparative apathy of an Argentine audience. When the enormous audience rose en masse when the tiny representative of John Bull strode into the arena to the strains of God Save the Queen, the coup d'oeil was brilliant in the extreme; we were glad to observe that similar honours were paid to the Argentine National Hymn, the entente cordiale between the English here and the land of their residence (permanent or temporary, as the case may be) being thus emphasised. Not a vacant box or seat was to be seen, and we congratulate the Hospital on the happy thought that inspired, the fact that carried out and the good fortune that accompanied the entertainment, which must have resulted in a very handsome sum being handed over to the Hospital. As for the performance, Frank Brown drew up a programme comprising his best performers and their favorite acts; and where all were unsurpassable it would be invidious on our part to particularise. The clowns, for the first time in this country, cracked their jokes, quips, cranks and comicalities in English, but, truth to tell, the innovation was somewhat of a mistake, as, being dead out of practise in the public use of the vernacular, this part of the show did not go with its accustomed ease and swing. We remind the British public that Mr. Frank Brown's benefit will take place on Tuesday next, and in return for what he has done for the hospital, the English-speaking residents are certainly bound to be present.

We publish to-day a breezy Letter from Paris, exclusively for our lady readers. We feel sure they will enjoy it.

A writer says that whipping a boy may make him stupid. It may be, but it is more likely to make him smart.

We find the following interesting paragraph in the European papers to hand yesterday:—"Sam Jones, the revivalist, has created a panic among negroes by predicting 50,000 deaths in New Orleans before August." "Bravo! Sam. Come to the Plate.

Advices from Asuncion report the failure of a large firm there; but the amount of shortage is not stated. There is no other news of importance, good or bad.

The 922 houses we referred to yesterday as unlet are all in the business centre of the city, and we are informed that, taking in the whole city, there are at present over 2000 houses for which tenants cannot be found. Should the crises continue, which is, unfortunately only too probable, there will be four or five thousand unlet houses in town before the year has half run its course. The plain fact of the matter is that people find it a material impossibility to pay the enormous rents that have prevailed for so long; and the sooner house-owners get this solemn truth into their heads, the better for them.

"Born of caprice and killed by a shrug of the shoulders," is M. de Blowitz's epitaph of Boulangism.

The microbe theory is being ridden to death in Europe. The influenza epidemic is now attributed to it. The great Pasteur says it is
